

Insights: Publications

Text Messages: Preservation Lessons for Mobile E-Discovery

KT LitSmart Blog

December 20, 2017

Written by Nicole D. Allen

There was a time when the only data you needed to collect in response to a discovery request was corporate email. Even if you received or sent work emails from your phone, this data would be located on a corporate server and no data would need to be collected directly from your phone. No computer forensic experts were needed.

Related People

Nicole D. Allen

t 404.815.6086

niallen@ktslaw.com