With the D.C. Circuit tightening the screws on the National Labor Relations Board to firmly establish a joint employer standard, Wednesday's confirmation of former Morgan Lewis & Bockius LLP attorney John Ring may not be enough to quickly break through the ethical logjam that doomed the board's attempt to put a more employer-friendly standard in place late last year, lawyers say.

Law360 interviewed Kilpatrick Townsend's Charlie Feuss on the matter. For more click here.
