November 27, 2024

Law360 (November 27)- The School of STEM at Diné College has secured a second patent for a device designed to measure and record various electric signals from the body's organs for diagnostic purposes, making it the only tribal college or university in the nation to receive such patents.

The achievement not only doubles the Arizona college's intellectual property portfolio, but enhances its academic reputation and positions it as a leader in intellectual property among tribal colleges while providing a path to economic empowerment for its community, according to the school's announcement of the patent.
