Jamey Goldin represents and counsels clients in a wide range of issues associated with regulatory, compliance, litigation, transactional, administrative, government relations, and policy matters impacting the energy industry and other heavily regulated industries. In addition, he has represented and counseled clients in proceedings before state public utility commissions, federal regulatory agencies, the South Carolina Supreme Court, other levels of state and federal trial and appellate courts, the state insurance departments, and other federal and state branches of government. Jamey is registered as a lobbyist representing clients before the South Carolina General Assembly.

Prior to joining the firm, Jamey was a partner in the Charleston, Columbia, and Washington, D.C. offices of a national law firm where he concentrated his practice on energy and government relations and represented clients in regulatory, administrative, and government relations matters. He represented clients in the energy, environmental, infrastructure, healthcare, insurance, and local government sectors. Jamey was also Energy Regulatory Counsel for Eastern North America for a well-known multinational technology corporation as part of its Global Energy Markets and Policy Team.

Upon graduation from law school, Jamey served in various legal counsel roles throughout his seven-year tenure with the South Carolina House of Representatives including three years as Chief Legal Counsel and Chief of Staff for the South Carolina House of Representatives Labor, Commerce and Industry Committee and the South Carolina Public Utilities Review Committee.

Jamey was recognized as a South Carolina “Rising Star” in 2024 for Energy & Natural Resources and Legislative & Governmental Affairs by Super Lawyers magazine. He was honored as a “Legal Elite of the Lowcountry” in 2022 and 2023 for Government Law and Energy Law by Charleston Business Monthly.
