She also represents employers in arbitrations brought under both collective bargaining agreements and alternative dispute resolution provisions.

In addition, Susan provides practical guidance to employers on employment-related issues, including wage-hour compliance, discrimination issues arising under federal and state statutes, and strategies for handling employee complaints, performance issues, and terminations. She partners with clients to ensure they understand how changes in applicable state and federal laws affect their policies and practices. She has assisted clients in structuring and implementing reorganizations and force reductions affecting employees across numerous states, and in exploring cost-saving alternatives to reductions-in-force.
