

Insights: Publications

Court Supports Plans' Freedom to Craft Own Process for Beneficiary Designations

HR Daily Advisor

June 8, 2017

Written by

Beneficiary designations, and disputes over them, can be a disproportionate drain of time and other resources spent by administrators of tax-qualified retirement plans. The Employee Retirement Income Security Act of 1974 (ERISA) does not prescribe a particular manner by which participants in ERISA-covered plans must designate their beneficiaries.