Story Oliver represents a wide variety of clients, assists them with public policy issues and appropriations matters, and advocates on their behalf primarily before the North Carolina General Assembly and local governments.

While attending the University of North Carolina at Chapel Hill, Story worked as a public relations intern, public relations apprentice, and then an account coordinator at one of the nation's largest independently held public relations, advertising, and digital media agencies based in Raleigh, North Carolina where she aided in the development of ideas and conducted research in support of public relations, advertising, and marketing initiatives for clients. Story also worked at a bipartisan lobbying firm in Raleigh, North Carolina where she gained valuable experience working with various members of the North Carolina General Assembly to develop government solutions for client concerns and she researched and gathered materials necessary to assist clients with their lobbying and marketing needs.
