Brian Murphy focuses his practice on complex commercial litigation and appeals in federal and state court.

While attending The University of Texas School of Law, Brian worked with the firm as a summer associate in 2025. He also served as a judicial intern at the Supreme Court of Texas and an intern at the Travis County District Attorney's Office. Brian was Managing Online Content Editor of the Texas Law Review, Vol. 105 and Executive Editor of the Texas International Law Journal, Vol. 60. He was selected into the Hutcheson First-Year Moot Court Competition by the faculty of the David J. Beck Center for Legal Research, Writing, and Appellate Advocacy. Brian was a research and teaching assistant for Professor Lawrence Sager and served as a student attorney with the Mithoff Pro Bono Program Parole Project.

Prior to attending law school, Brian worked in Washington, D.C. at an international consulting firm where he led a team of business strategy consultants serving the U.S. Department of State.

While attending the College of William and Mary, Brian was selected into the D.C. Semester Program, through which he studied the intersection of law and politics, authored a capstone research paper, and completed a full-time internship with a lobbying firm.
