Cleo Hu focuses her practice on trademark and copyright law.

While attending Fordham University School of Law, Cleo worked with the firm as a summer associate in 2021, focusing on trademark and copyright practice in the Greater China region. She was a research assistant at the Leitner Center for International Law and Justice and a legal research assistant at a preeminent immigration law firm in New York City. She also served as an Associate Editor and staff member for the Fordham International Law Journal and the vice president of the Fashion Law Society at Fordham Law.

Cleo was born in China and educated in the U.S. Cleo is fluent in Mandarin Chinese and English. She received a comprehensive liberal arts education and tends to formulate strategies encompassing various perspectives on legal issues. In her spare time, she formed a band incorporating Western and Chinese instruments and was an East Asia film critic during her undergraduate.

Armed with an understanding of both countries' cultural and legal landscapes, Cleo is committed to aiding clients in maneuvering through the intricacies of the legal systems.
