Insights: Publications

Human trophoblasts confer resistance to viruses implicated in perinatal infection

American Journal of Obstetrics and Gynecology

AUGUST 6, 2014 Written by Avraham Bayer, Ph.D.

Primary human trophoblasts were previously shown to be resistant to viral infection, and able to confer this resistance to nontrophoblast cells. Can trophoblasts protect nontrophoblastic cells from infection by viruses or other intracellular pathogens that are implicated in perinatal infection?

Related People

Avraham Bayer, Ph.D.
t 206.224.2859
abayer@ktslaw.com