"As far as resources go, everyone kind of has to be efficient," said Jeff Reed, an attorney who chairs the state and local tax practice at Kilpatrick Townsend & Stockton in New York. "If you're a state, you don't want to spend a lot of money chasing small amounts. And if you're a company, it's probably not worth appealing over a small-dollar thing. But with these types of tax disputes, the tax dollars at stake are high."
