E-Discovery certifications, whether general (process related, privacy or project management, for example) or software tool specific, are widely available. The legal industry is not alone in its strong support for third-party skills validation. Have a gander at the impressive Google image search on the word "certified." So, should you need to certify that your garden has resources suitable to increase the world's population of monarch butterflies, rest assured, there is a certification available! With so many certification options, what factors should you consider when designing a learning plan that works for you and your E-Discovery organization?
